with water related heritage*

Introduction

Maybe the significance of water related culture and heritage for today's water management challenges is a 'no brainer' for you.... but, why is water related culture and heritage hardly at all mentioned in water management policies in the Netherlands and abroad? There is an apparent disconnection between water management on the one hand and heritage on the other. A disconnect apparently due to a mandatory divide; water management is to provide water services, water safety and water security for livelihoods, and cultural heritage organisations are primarily to protect and conserve the uniqueness and historic values of tangible and intangible icons of the past. These differences in mandate have resulted in disciplinary and institutional divides. Divides that prohibit making use of past experiences and assets for today's water management challenges.

Increasingly water professionals and heritage experts are looking for ways to bridge these undesirable divides. Over the last 10 years, dialogues between water managers and heritage experts have been organised on the significance of material, governance and spiritual water related heritage for today's water management challenges with the intention to:

- Enhance the interest to 'learn from the past' and add value to future-water management interventions;
- Encourage national activities on water and heritage between water management and heritage institutions;
- Develop a thematic agenda for research on the significance of water related heritage for water management challenges.

These dialogues were complemented by publications such as the Blue Papers, a serious Game and a Compendium on water related heritage in The Netherlands as part of a partnership between TUDelft, WaterNet, ICOMOS Netherlands and Witteveen+Bos. These will be available at the side event, and the serious game "Water Values" can be played.

Last March, these activities have resulted in the recommendation to the Mid-Term Review of the UN Water Action Decade to initiate an international Water, Culture and Heritage Platform.

Our side event at the AIWW initiates the development of this international Water, Culture and Heritage Platform. The event will set out with the Dutch Heritage Deal as an example that bridges the mandatory, institutional and disciplinary divides, and will be followed by pitches and round table discussions among MSc and PhD students on their research work on the significance of water related heritage for today, followed by thematic Round Table discussions, followed by recommendations for the World Water Forum 10 in Bali in May, 2024, and leading into the session of Wetskills challenges.

The side event is organised by ICOMOS ISC Water Heritage / ICOMOS Netherlands Focus Group Water & Heritage, in cooperation with IHE Delft Institute for Water Education, WaterNet AGV, Wetskills, Koninklijk Nederlands WaterNetwerk, Amsterdam International Water Week, TUDelft and Museum Geelvinck (Global Network of Water Museums).

The side event will be linked up to the Water and Heritage conference 'Waterscapes – Water Landscapes: uniting the past with the future' in Ribeira Sacra, Galicia, Spain, on 6 - 7 November 2023, organised by ICOMOS Spain and ICOMOS-IFLA ISC Cultural Landscapes (ISCCL) in collaboration with ICOMOS ISC Water Heritage / ICOMOS Netherlands Focus Group Water & Heritage. This will include a first step to create an open Working Group between the ISC Cultural Landscapes and the ISC Water Heritage.
